The researchers aimed for a low number of carbs—40 g per day, or about two slices of bread—to avoid a common problem with previous studies that claimed to be studying low-carb levels. Most recommended around 100 g of carbs per day, which, while technically "low-carb," is still more than the amount consumed by many low-carb diehards.

Is Cutting Carbs The Key To Fat Loss? | Bodybuilding.com

When you cut carbs to the bare minimum, your body enters a state called ketosis, where your start burning fat for fuel instead of the usual carbs. Funny thing about ketosis, it turns your breath a bit funky. And, since it comes from within, no amount of brushing or flossing can change that. I craved sugar — a lot!
